

Love and Solidarity: Rev. James Lawson and Nonviolence in the Search for Workers' Rights

Posted on August 19, 2016 by Michael Honey

This August Bullfrog Films launches, Love and Solidarity: Rev. James Lawson and Nonviolence in the Search for Workers' Rights, a 38-minute film introduction to tactics and philosophy of nonviolence in labor, civil rights, immigrant rights, and community organizing. It has been shown it to audiences across the country and found to stimulate an important and timely conversation among students, Black Lives Matter and union audiences.

You might want your library or organization to get a copy or do a public screening. For more information on the film, see the Bullfrog Films catalog page. A discount price is available for labor and community organizations; contact Bullfrog Films for pricing information.

For campus and community screening rights, please visit Bullfrog Communities.
